ABOUT THE HUNSRUECK REGION

The Hunsrueck is a low mountain range located in Rhineland-Palatinate and to a small extent in Saarland with the Erbeskopf (816 m above sea level) as the highest elevation. As a southwestern part of the Rhenish Slate Mountains, it is one of the older mountains in Germany, whose rocks originate mainly from the Devonian and were folded during the Variscan mountain building.

The core of Hunsrueck is formed by the Hunsrueck plateau (400 to 500 m above sea level) and the Simmerner Mulde. In the northwest the Hunsrueck is bordered by the Moselle and in the east by the Rhine. The northeasternmost tip is therefore formed by the German Corner.
